NCE upon a time there were three children, Wendy, John, and Michael Darling by name.

Bedtime was their favorite time because every night in the nursery Wendy told stories about Peter Pan.

Peter Pan, you must know, is a little boy who made up his mind never to grow up. He lives in a far-away Never Land, full of adventure and fun.

The children loved to hear stories about him
—and so did Peter Pan.

Yes, Peter Pan himself (with the fairy, Tinker Bell) would come flying down and sit on the nursery window sill to hear the stories about himself.

Peter liked those stories so much that he decided to take Wendy home with him to tell them to his friends the Lost Boys in the Never Land.

That made Tinker Bell jealous, but Wendy was thrilled. "I couldn't leave Michael and John, though," she said.

So Peter agreed to take them all.

"How shall we travel?" Wendy asked.

“Fly, of course,” Peter said, and he taught them how,—easy as one, two, three. All it takes is a wish and a pinch of pixie dust—and a little practice, too.

Then out the nursery window they flew, and away to the Never Land.

The Never Land was a wonderful place—
an island in a nameless sea.

There were fairies living in the treetops.
There were mermaids swimming in a lagoon.
There were real red Indians in a village on a cliff.
There were woods full of wild animals.

Best of all, there was a shipful of pirates—wicked ones, with a specially wicked leader, Captain Hook.

Wendy, John, and Michael knew at first sight that they would love the Never Land. And they did.

They liked Peter's wonderful underground house, with lots of hidden doorways in a great big hollow tree. There they met the Lost Boys who shared Peter's home. And the Boys were delighted that Wendy had come to tell bedtime stories to them.

But they did not spend much time in that underground house. There were too many exciting things to do.

Sometimes they played at war with the red Indians, who were really their very good friends.

Sometimes they had trouble with the wicked pirates, who were their enemies.

One day the pirates stole away Princess Tiger Lily of the Indian tribe

The Indian Chief, her father, was all upset.
But Peter Pan rescued Tiger Lily and brought her safely home.

That made Captain Hook, the leader of the pirates, madder at Peter Pan than he had ever been.

"I'll catch that Pan if it's the last thing I do!" he vowed. And he laid a wicked plan.

He kidnapped Wendy, John, and Michael and all the Lost Boys while Peter was away.
And he took them to his pirate ship.

“Now, my fine fellows,” said Captain Hook, when he had the boys and Wendy on his ship, “which will it be? Will you all turn pirates, or do you want to walk the plank, and fall ker-plash into the sea?”

"I guess we'll turn pirates," said the boys.
But Wendy would have none of that.

"I think you should be ashamed of yourselves," she said. "Peter Pan will rescue us."

And she was right For at the last minute
Peter Pan appeared.

He beat Captain Hook in a good, fair fight, and he freed every one of his friends They scared those bad pirates into jumping overboard and rowing away in their boat

“Hurrah!” cried Pan. “Now the pirate ship is ours!”

“Where shall we sail to?” cried the boys.

“It’s time we went home,” Wendy said.

“If you must go home, we’ll sail there,”
said Peter Pan.

With a wish and a pinch of pixie dust, they made that pirate ship fly! And away they all sailed on that ship, through the sky, to the nursery window again.

The children's parents could scarcely believe that their children had been to Never Land. But Wendy, John, and Michael, even when they grew up, never forgot Peter Pan.
